The Open Meeting Law says that an agenda must “contain sufficient details concerning the specific matters to be discussed by the public body.” 1 V.S.A. § 312(d)(3). To comply with this requirement, an agenda should include specific topics such as "proposed contract with ambulance service," or "discussion of speed limit on town highway 7" rather than simply including general terms such as "contract," or "speed limits" which do not provide the public with sufficient specificity about what will be discussed and decided.
